Commencement Program To Honor War Dead

University of Idaho's 103 Gold Star names reported during 1944-45 of alumni and students who gave their lives in World War II will be honored at the fiftieth commencement program planned for June 2-4. In tribute to them, a war memorial program will be printed containing a short sketch of each as well as those names of the 66 war dead honored last year.

Alumni Day

Opening the commencement program will be Alumni Day on June 2 with a luncheon and business meeting at the Hotel Moscow. Saturday evening guests and students are invited to attend "Fresh Fields," commencement play sponsored by Curtain club at 8:15 p. m.

Plans for Sunday

Baccalaureate services begin Sunday at 10:45 a. m. with the academic procession. Following the 11 a. m. baccalaureate, a luncheon for the Board of Regents and official guests will be held at Hays hall at 12:15 p. m. Parents, the Board of Regents, faculty, alumni and friends of the university are invited to an informal reception at 4 p. m. at Hays hall honoring the class of 1945. Hostesses for the reception are the Faculty Women's club.

Band Concert

Concluding the Sunday services will be a band concert at 5 p. m. on the university lawn and a vesper recital at 8 p. m. in the auditorium.

June 4 commencement exercises will start at 9:45 a. m. with the academic procession from the administration building to the memorial gymnasium.

Minute Maids Sell Poppies Friday

Minute Maids will appear in group houses Friday evening selling poppies as part of the traditional drive sponsored annually by the American Legion Auxiliary. One hundred per cent participation is urged.

LATE GEMS

Due to circumstances beyond control of the staff, the Gem of the Mountains will not be published soon enough to permit distribution before the student body has left the campus. This lateness is a situation that we have heretofore avoided, though it has existed, in war times, in many schools, including the University of Utah and the University of Washington.

The delay has been caused by slowness of the paper mills to fill the printer's orders for paper, by unprecedented slowness of the railroad in moving the paper to the printer, and by unavoidable delay in obtaining the covers.

The staff has done its part well, having completed its work earlier than usual in spite of extraordinary handicaps. It would be hard to overstate the conscientious efforts of the editor, her associates, and the staff to perform their functions.

How to Get Gem

If you want your Gem mailed, send us your address on a penny postal. The postal should be mailed to:

Graduate Manager
University of Idaho
Moscow, Idaho.

If we do not receive such a postal, your Gem will be held until we hear from you. It can be delivered when you return to school next fall if you prefer. If you live in or near Moscow, you may call for it in person at my office during the summer.

After last week's debacle concerning the intermingling of dates on the university calendar as a result of which the dance sponsored by the Activities Board was in competition with four house dances, Jason suggests that all-university functions henceforth be given priority.

University events are modeled to attract the entire study body, not only segments who don't happen to be doing something else. House dances, which will only appeal to a certain small part of the student body, can be lumped together on one week-end night and all-university affairs can occupy the other night alone. In all fairness to the Activities Board which is already fighting an uphill struggle, this is the only method.

It's been a long time since more work was put in the planning and directing of a Gem of the Mountains than was this year; so the ax that fell on the staff this week when they discovered that there was not enough paper available to publish the Gem before students left school had a double edge.

Jason has watched the hard working staff working nights in the office next to the Argonaut. They have expended valuable time in turning out a Gem that will be worth keeping in years to come. When the others had gone Editor Beverly Weber kept on working, anxious to see that nothing would be left undone.

An understanding student body will appreciate the many hours of work put in on the Gem, and will relish their late copy even more when they recall that this year's Gem staff worked under very difficult conditions and yet turned out all the material before the deadline.

Faculty members and those on the administrative staff of the university have finally realized an ambition of years' standing in that a faculty club has been authorized and will hold its first event next Tuesday.

Long used to seeing students gambol through the Student Union building faculty members have been unable to do anything other than stand on the sidelines and watch. With a new club at their disposal they, too, have the opportunity for social relaxation and can indulge in whatever fancies please them. Conveniently located and made over to suit all tastes, the Faculty club will soon be another successful campus institution.

By an ingeniously arranged examination schedule which has drawn complaints from all sides, many underclassmen are required to linger on the campus to take finals after commencement when, for part of the students, the school year is over.

The arrangement seems to be satisfactory to no one, except those who convince themselves that scheduling examinations after commencement is a good way to obtain a flatteringly large audience at graduation exercises. For the seniors, the system means the nuisance and confusion of taking examinations whenever they can find time in any classroom or office space available. Usually, they have little time to study and must sometimes crowd as many as three examinations into one day.

For underclassmen the system often means waiting for several days with nothing to do, to take a final examination scheduled at the end of the week. After seniors have gone and the school has held its final exercises for the year, to prolong the school year is annoying.

For instructors, the system means ending a course twice—once for departing seniors and again for underclassmen who remain a few days longer to take regular class work. It means making out a set of examinations for each group.

Jason thinks that the school year should end at the same time for everyone with baccalaureate and commencement held immediately after finals are over. If the purpose of late examinations is to have
